

The story of a Saint and the Rain

Islamic Stories - Volume 26

Written by Mansoor Ali Shah

All rights reserved.

No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means-electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise-without the prior written permission of the copyright holder.

Chapter 1: The Intimacy of the Divine

Hearts Turned to Heaven: Seeking Rain Through Prayer

A period of drought had drawn hearts toward divine mercy. Amidst growing concern, a group of individuals sought the intercession of a pious elder, imploring him to pray for rainfall.

Their hopes rested upon the spiritual rank and sincerity of this devout figure, whose life was dedicated to the remembrance of God and self-effacing humility.

A Humble Refusal: Acknowledging Divine Displeasure

Upon their request, the elder did not respond with immediate supplication. Instead, he offered a response that reflected both his spiritual sensitivity and profound self-accountability.

Elder:

"These days, Allah the Exalted, is He, is displeased with me."

Rather than deny them a solution, he directed them toward a symbolic act—modest in gesture but profound in meaning.

The handkerchief in the Courtyard: A Subtle Invocation

He advised them to perform a seemingly simple action: wet a handkerchief and place it in the courtyard.

This act, though silent, was filled with spiritual intimacy and trust in the subtle signs of divine mercy.

Elder:

"Do this—wet a handkerchief and lay it out in the courtyard. Since He is indeed displeased with me, He will not allow that handkerchief to dry."

No sooner had the cloth been laid out than rain began to fall.

The act, devoid of grandeur, became a testament to the unseen connection between the sincere and the Divine.

Moments That Deepen Affection:

This incident was not merely a miracle, but a glimpse into the hidden dialogues between the beloved of God and their Lord—dialogues steeped in humility, love, and spiritual yearning.

Such events, quiet and uncelebrated, continue to nurture love in the hearts of those who witness or recount them.